Event Overview

The Coding Club of Computer Science and Engineering Department hosted an event exclusively for the 2nd and 3rd year students, aimed at emphasizing the importance of extra-curricular activities in shaping their academic and professional trajectories. This event was designed to foster a deeper engagement with activities beyond the traditional curriculum, recognizing their vital role in enhancing students' skill sets, broadening their perspectives, and contributing to their overall personal development.

Objectives:

The primary objectives of the event were:

1. To raise awareness among students about the significance of participating in extra-curricular activities.
2. To provide a platform for students to showcase their abilities and explore new areas of interest.
3. To encourage collaboration and healthy competition among peers.

Participation and Activities:

The event saw enthusiastic participation from 37 students across various branches within the Computer Science Department. The students were provided with a structured platform to display and hone their skills, which included a technical and fun-filled quiz designed to challenge their knowledge, and creativity.

The event commenced with a quiz competition, where each participant engaged in the activity on their individual systems. The quiz was carefully curated to test the participants' knowledge across “Game Technology” domain relevant to computer science. Throughout the duration of the quiz, faculty members and club representatives vigilantly monitored the participants to ensure the integrity of the competition and to prevent any malpractice.

Distinguished Presence:

The event was graced by Dr. W. Aisha Banu, Head of Department, of Computer Science and Engineering, who made a visit to the venue. Her presence added a layer of significance to the event, motivating the participants and reinforcing the department's commitment to supporting students' holistic development.
